

Refracting Light

In our science lessons, we've been learning about light. We had previously identified that light travels in straight lines through transparent objects, like glass, but when we place an object in water it appears to change shape. We learned that this is due to light refracting, or bending, whilst travelling through liquids.